

This map shows the limits of Georgia as set by the Proclalmation Line of 1763 after the French and Indian War. The parishes established by Governor Ellis—especially those that made up the Low Country—were the main centers of settlement and economic wealth. As the colony prospered and expanded, the number of Native Americans living in the region dwindled.